Protocol Title: Evaluating Community Engagement in Electronic SDOH Screening

You are invited to join a pilot program led by Dr. David Ansell and Dr. Michael Cui from the Rush BMO Institute for Health Equity. This pilot study aims to assess whether residents of Chicago's West Side will complete an online social determinants of health (SDOH) survey distributed by a community organization and their willingness to share limited health information for access to care resources. The goal is to evaluate the effectiveness of using electronic devices for a scalable, cost-effective SDOH screening.

Taking part in this study is completely voluntary (it is your choice). You do not have to participate in this study and may choose to leave the study at any time. If you decide not to participate in this study or leave the study at a later time, your health care, benefits, or relationship with Rush University Medical Center will not change or be affected. The only other option to participation is not to participate.

If you agree to participate, you will be asked to complete the Community Screening for Social Resources survey. If eligible, you will be asked to share contact information so the research team can help connect you to Rush social care provider for additional support.

There are minimal risks to participating in this survey. Study risks are related to invasion of privacy and potential breach in confidentiality. We will take precautions to protect your information. To mitigate potential data security risks, your survey response will be stored and protected within the Rush University Medical Center network.

Information collected may be used for future programs or shared with other care providers. Any information which could identify you will be removed before it is shared. Since identifying information will be removed, you will not be asked for additional consent.

You may benefit from taking part in this study. The Rush Social care providers will intervene with any patients that are screens positive for SDOH and provide appropriate information and support they believe may be of benefit.

You will not be paid for participating, but you might benefit from the support provided by Rush Social Care providers if you are identified as needing help.

Questions are encouraged. If you have further questions about this program, you may call Dr. Cui at 312-947-2940 or email us at HECAP@Rush.edu. If you have questions about the rights of research participants, please contact the Rush University Medical Center Office of Research Affairs at 1-800-876-0772. Please save or print a copy of this page for your records.

By completing the survey and providing contact information, you agree to participate in this program and be contacted by Rush Social Care provider.
